WRITINGS

Aristotle's writings fall into two groups: those lost and those which have been preserved. The latter are those which were preserved by Aristotle's disciples and are known as the "works of Aristotle". The former are those which were lost and are known as the "lost works of Aristotle". Aristotle's works are divided into three main groups: the theoretical, the practical, and the poetical. The theoretical works include the Metaphysics, the Nicomachean Ethics, and the Politics. The practical works include the Physics, the Aethetics, and the Rhetoric. The poetical works include the Poetics.
